Blueroot Health — DTC Operations Manager

Re: DTC Operations Manager (fully remote)

Hi Blueroot ecommerce team,

Before applying, I read the four stores the way the posting describes the job: fairhavenhealth.com in full and bariatricfusion.com, vitalnutrients.co and unjury.com sampled — 397 published products, 57 page fetches, no logins. The review, with working fixes and a weekly QA workbook, is at mousabatarseh.com/blueroot-review/. It opens with what works, and a lot does: Fairhaven scores 95 of 100 on the 29-check rubric I run on Michigan storefronts, the best result I have measured this year.

The findings are the operating gaps a Monday checklist catches. Three of the eight footer "Shop" links open an empty or one-sold-out-item collection. Because All Products sorts A-Z, the one sold-out product sits second on the page and second in the search drawer's Trending Now on every page of the store. Five single-variant products carry a "30% off select sizes" badge while the card, the PDP, the JSON-LD and the subscription price all show full price. Every one of 20 sampled titles runs 73–91 characters. And the four stores ship from one address with three free-shipping thresholds and two delivery promises. Each finding on the page has a count, the Shopify change that fixes it, and a working prototype built on your own product data.

For seven years I have run retail and wholesale storefronts on Shopify and WooCommerce: product setup and catalog data for 14,000+ SKUs, promotions and seasonal launches, the QA that keeps prices and pages honest, and the GA4 and Search Console reporting behind it. The weekly sheet on the page is the cadence I would run from the first Monday.

Two things to say plainly. I have not administered Recharge, and my 3PL coordination has been with a warehouse rather than a named fulfillment partner — the order flow, inventory sync and exception handling are the same work. I stayed away from all health and product-claim language; that review belongs to your regulatory team.

I'd welcome a call to walk through the review and the workbook.

Thank you,

Mousa Batarseh
